Morale Cycle

It takes the morale cycle longer to return to its starting point than it did earlier in the war, but there is evidence that it is still in operation.

The Allies are still in continuous motion from extremes of optimism to extremes of pessimism, and presumably the Germans and Japanese are, too, though their moods are concealed by close censorship.

The cycle was moving steadily toward extreme optimism from the time the invasion of western Europe was managed successfully in June until the break-through into France proper in the late summer. It reached its climax with the demonstration of power as Gen. Patton's army spearheaded the drive for the Rhine and since then it has been moving slowly toward pessimism again. There is evidence that it now is reaching its climax and once more there will be a gradual expansion of hopefulness which may not run its course till Germany's final defeat. The recent military and diplomatic setbacks have hastened the climax, but it is evident also that these things have been made to seem more serious than they really are by their occurrence during a period of softening morale.

Earlier in the war, extremes of confidence and despair came closer together. Everything seemed alternately lost or recovered at intervals which sometimes were only weeks, not months, apart. Morale is a vital factor in war, and those who complain that everything seems gloomy may reflect with profit that for the Germans and the Japanese there now is no relief from gloom, except that provided by a minor triumph. Having little, they must make the most of what they have. The Allies, having much, are tempted to make too little of it.

Goats In Sheep's Clothing

The federal government's sporadic attempts to designate what is useless and even harmful as far as waging war is concerned reveal the bristling points of controversy in all attempts to judge the other fellow's contribution to the good of society.

For instance, it is now official that horse racing and those who make their living at it are not only useless but harmful in the war effort. Baseball players are going to get closer attention. But may it be assumed, also, that night club entertainers, for instance, will be diverted into something more useful, and also professional football and hockey players, pool room operators, movie and stage actors, and musicians.

While all these occupational groups are sure in their own minds that they are not only useful but contributing directly to the war—as no doubt race-track and baseball people, themselves, are sure—the fact is that many of their fellow citizens do not see it that way. A man who earns his livelihood prospectively shoveling coal, selling neckties, practicing law, or working in a war plant hardly can be expected to believe that anyone who makes a glamorous living playing baseball, for instance, is contributing anything to the war, and baseball players are similarly skeptical about other occupations. As a matter of fact, to hear the conversation on the subject, one might conclude that even war workers, self-styled, are to be regarded with suspicion. When government begins to separate the useless goats from the useful sheep, all goats are sheep in their own eyes and all sheep are likely to be goats in the other fellow's eyes.

World Police Authority

The faction-warring Greeks must be flattered by the presence of Prime Minister Churchill in their midst. Elsewhere, the fact that this busy man must leave his country to handle a troublesome detail of the reorganization of Europe in the wake of the German spoilers is a sharp reminder of the function of a world police authority—if one existed.

It would be subject to call, and it would be subject, also, to dispatch on orders from the security council. In performing its function, it would be above charges of national interest. For example, in Greece, where the British government is asserting itself, it says, to give Greeks the ultimate right of self-determination, a world police authority would not be hampered by the suspicion that it represented interference by one nation with the affairs of another nation.

Working with a police authority would be the parallel authority of a world court, to adjudicate points of difference interfering with restoration of order. The prime minister of Great Britain would not need to neglect other duties in an attempt to reconcile opposing factions; that function would be performed by conciliators selected for their objectivity in handling disputes. There is nothing new about any of the machinery; it would be only an extension of the means now depended on throughout the world for handling similar problems on a smaller scale. It is only a dream, but the alternative is the nightmare in Greece and the certainty that Greek factionalism is typical, not unique.

The Stars Say

For Saturday, December 30

THE sidereal operations for this day indicate a fairly routine or uneventful state of affairs, with the interests centered about the pursuit of fun, good times and pleasure generally, with the activities of youth and its objectives emphasized in the scene. All social, domestic and sentimental enjoyments move under high gear, with perhaps a trifling setback or mishap.

Those whose birthday it is may enjoy a fairly routine year, with all professional, intellectual, literary and other cultural forms making fair progress. All vocations and avocations of youth and its enjoyments are uppermost rather than any serious objectives by elders.

A child born on this day, while possessing all the normal leanings of youthful play, fun and pastimes, may find little encouragement from its elders.

The Year Ahead

By James Thrasher

Five months ago it seemed that the war in Europe might be over today. Four months ago it appeared probable that the turn of 1945 might find us well on the road to reconversion living, toward peacetime existence.

Three months ago it seemed that we should soon be able to turn our whole strength against Japan, even though Germany might not be beaten within the calendar year. Two months ago it seemed that once our presidential election was over the world could set about with hope and enthusiasm to build a permanent structure for peace on the foundations laid at Dumbarton Oaks.

Today we know that 1945 will be a year of hard tasks and fatal actions. We shall suffer somewhat from the summer spree of overconfidence and relaxation, but now at least we know that we are still fighting bitterly with two desperate enemies whose strength and determination are by no means exhausted.

This year is likely to bring the heaviest casualties that Americans have suffered in any year of any war. There will be bad news of setbacks and delays along with the good news of victories. And the bad news will be harder to bear because final victory may be almost in sight.

It will be a year of diligence for all of us here at home. We shall have to guard against impatience and discouragement and war weariness. We shall have to prove to ourselves and to the men who are fighting the war that we can take it, stay on the job, supplying these fighting men's needs in abundance and not cheapen their sacrifices by petty complaints.

From our government, 1945 will ask a wiser and more vigorous world leadership than has ever been required of an American government. For the President and the military leaders the year will bring more endless days of imperative decisions. From the new Congress it will demand a selfless, partyless patriotism that must guide against action fatal to world peace.

But this is also a year of hope. The first day of 1942 found the country almost too stunned by the preceding 24 days to realize its peril. Two years ago the road from Africa to Berlin and from Guadalcanal to Tokyo seemed endless. Last year the great gamble of D-day lay in the doubtful future.

Great strides can be taken in 1945. We have a superior military force with superior leadership. We have the confidence of most of the world's peoples as the guarantors of freedom and fair dealings. We have the potentialities of still greater strength to throw into the battles for victory and peace.

These are responsibilities as well as resources. To use them fully and wisely is a job that calls for conscious, increased effort by all of us—from President and General to housewife and school boy. What Americans do in the next 365 days will have profound effect on the shape of things to come.

By the middle of January practically all of the Christmas candy will have been worn off of chairs.

One good turn deserves another—one bad one is what causes auto accidents.

GUARDING YOUR HEALTH

Foot Troubles — What Causes Them?

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
WHILE it isn't particularly practical, it is stimulating to discuss which organ of man has raised him from the status of the beast.

The eye, while a wonderful structure, is not as keen in man as in many of the lower animals. The same may be said of the ear.

Claims Of The Brain

The argument really comes down to considering the claims of the brain, the hand and the foot. Our brains are superior for such actions as thinking up holidays like Christmas, and patron saints like Santa Claus, and for reading Shakespeare and such things, but the bird and the dog have brains that are perfectly sufficient for their purposes. No other animals, except the higher apes, have a hand which in any way compares to man, and there are distinguished anthropologists who have said it was his hand which lifted man from the beast.

But others argue for the feet. Man alone stands on his two feet erect, and uses them exclusively for locomotion. The birds stand and rest on two feet, but they do not use them much for locomotion.

Certainly if the argument took the turn of which organ could give the most trouble, the feet would probably win. Our hands do not really give us much bother. Occasionally some scrivener gets writer's cramp, but that is more a less of a rare event.

Feet and Hands Alike

The feet have strain, whereas the hands are free of anything like continuous strain. They both are much alike in that they are composed of a number of small bones held together by ligaments, but the feet are under the strain of the weight of the body and of propelling the body forward.

Again, the hands are left unencumbered while doing their work, while the feet are shod with heavy, non-resilient leather, commonly called shoes and contraptions of cloth or wool commonly called stockings, and all their activities takes place inside these contraptions.

No wonder, then, that a prominent orthopedist says that all the plagues on the basis of one of three factors: (1) variations in structure at the time of birth, so that they are not able to withstand the severe usage they undergo throughout life; (2) the manner in which the foot is used, including the influence of disease, in jury and infection; (3) the harmful effects of shoes and stockings.

The first group includes such conditions as congenital club foot and congenital flat foot.

The second group includes acquired flat foot and derangements of the blood vessels of the feet leading to ulcerations, bunions and similar degenerations.

The third, the kind of shoes and stockings we wear, is the one over which we have most control. And the lack of that control is what causes the most numerous, although the least serious, of our foot troubles.

In one of my articles the other day I said that foot troubles could come from shoes that were either too large or too small. An orthopedic surgeon wrote me that while it might seem that shoes that were too large would rub corns and callouses, as a matter of experience he never saw any foot trouble from shoes that were too large. But he saw plenty from shoes that are too small.

Your feet have two sizes, one when sitting and one when walking. The size of your foot changes while walking, but your shoes do not.

Your feet are larger after tramping around all day, but your shoes are not.

When blacksmiths existed, they were required to have a license in order to shoe a horse in forty-eight states of the union. In no state today is any license or examination required to fit a shoe to a human being. Many individuals go through life continually misfitted.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

B. B.—What are the symptoms of rheumatic fever?

Answer: High fever, red inflamed joints and drenching sweats. The inflammation may move from joint to joint—elbow one day, knee the next, ankle the next—leaving the previously inflamed joint quite comfortable.

M. A. G.—Do we have "taste buds"? If so what are they? What is their purpose, can they be destroyed, are they an absolute necessity?

Answer: Certainly we have taste buds. They are nerve endings on the tongue and contribute as much to the joy and happiness of life as anything. Why in the world would anybody want to destroy them? It is like saying, "Can I destroy my eyesight or my hearing?"

ROMANTIC MASQUERADE
by MARIE BLIZARD

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

On this nice November morning Daphne was out for a walk, going nowhere in particular, over hard-frost-bitten woodland trails, enjoying the blue-white sunlight, seeing nothing but bronze trees and bland skies. And a wisp of smoke that could come only from one of the three rustic cottages that nestled in the hollow directly in her path. She just happened to walk west when she set out on a hike that was supposed to give her an appetite for Sunday dinner at Kate Dennison's house.

Daphne's nose was pink, and so were her cheeks. It wasn't noon yet and she'd go just a little bit further—just to where you could actually see the rustic cottages. Then she'd turn back. She wasn't any spy.... She wasn't curious about where Steve lived....

Was she the kind of a girl who'd go out walking just to catch a glimpse of a man who'd treated her with comparative contempt? Would she try to find out anything personal about a man who was willing to leave her in the lurch—with her cellar room unfinished?

Decidedly not.

There were the cottages. Rather sweet they were, with little porches, and two of them with windows boarded up. The third one wasn't, and the smoke hadn't come from there, after all. It had come from a smoldering woodland fire off to the right. She couldn't see a sign of life anywhere.

Daphne was all alone in that woodland world, except for an imp in her ear: "All you have to do is walk straight ahead. The house looks deserted. It would be just ordinary curiosity to look at a deserted house. You don't know that he lives there. Don't be girlish. Go on! Have a quick look. If he's there, act surprised. Go on!"

She was very close to the house when she saw three bottles of milk standing on the porch. He was away!

"Halloo! Anybody home?" she called.

There was no answer.

Daphne walked up the steps boldly and knocked on the door. After a long time, she tried the door gently. It was open.

"I'll just take a little peek to see if he's comfortable," she said, showing conscience aside.

Steve was comfortable. She saw that at once. Comfortable in the way that some men are, without luxuries. The room, running straight across the front of the cottage, was small. There was a fieldstone hearth at one end, and two comfortable chairs were placed in front of it, with low tables convenient to each. There were books on shelves, and deep ash bowls and tobacco jars on the tables. There was a big, round table at the opposite end of the room, with a basket of rosy apples on it, and yet more books.

There were a couple of straight chairs and a desk-table with a battered typewriter standing on it. On the couch, there was a pillow with the print of his head in it. Navajo rungs were scattered on the floor, and a knitted blanket was neatly folded over the foot of the couch. There were a few pictures on the walls: good prints of hunting scenes, and game in flight.

Daphne approached the desk table and glanced at the untidy heap of papers and notebooks. She saw that they were covered with symbols and calculations that she could not read. A second glance disclosed a sheet of paper in the typewriter. She leaned over it and read:

The Staphylococcus Parasite

By Stephan H. Fenwick

She backed away slowly, and took a deep breath. I must go, she thought. This isn't fair, but she couldn't go then. This was where he lived, and she had to know more about him.

There were two half-opened doors, one to the right, and one to the left.

Gently Daphne pushed open the one nearest her, and found herself in a cubicle of a bedroom. Her eyes skipped over a neatly-made army cot, a chest of drawers and a single straight chair, and then lingered for a moment on expensive luggage piled in one corner, and rested for a long time on something that caught her eye on the chest of drawers.

It was a picture frame with two photographs facing each other. One, she surmised, was his mother; the other she studied for a long time, trying to keep her eyes as cool as the deep ones in the beautifully chiseled face of the young woman with softly-drawn pale blonde hair.

"So that's the reason," she murmured. "It's you! You're the woman he loves. Why aren't you here with him? Could you be a ghost?"

She'd love to have turned that serene photograph face down but she didn't dare.

Daphne looked away from it and saw other things: two leather boxes for handkerchiefs and collars, a stud box—all initialed S.H.F. There was a brace of military brushes, and some strange looking tubes with looped wire ends.

There was still the other room to be explored. She went into it expecting to find a sink, stove and table. No such simplicity met her eyes.

There was a high table-bench built along the side with the iron sink in the middle. About it there were racks filled with cotton-stopped test-tubes. It was a laboratory, the workroom of a scientist.

Daphne went out very thoughtfully and hurried over to Kate Dennison's. She was bursting with questions, but it wasn't until after dinner that she asked Dennison casually, "Tommy, did you ever hear of a Doctor Stephan Fenwick?"

"Fenwick?" Tommy took his head out of the sporting section, thought a moment, and answered, "Something familiar about the name, but I don't know...."

Daphne persisted "Try to think, Tommy."

"Fenwick?.... Nope."

"Oh, Tommy, you do!" Kate declared. "Wasn't that the name of the doctor who had a row with Dr. Lindquist at the Institute?"

"Maybe," her husband said. "And now—what about that Northwestern game Saturday? You girls like to...."

Suddenly Tommy put down his paper "I remember that Dr. Fenwick—not Fenwick—now. There was some sort of mystery about his leaving the Institute."

"What kind of a mystery?" queried Daphne.

Tommy shrugged. "Don't remember exactly. Seems to me somebody said he was a very successful surgeon in Boston and it looked kind of funny, giving up a career like that for the lab job here."

"If he'd done something terrible, like killing a patient, or something," Kate suggested helpfully.

"Oh, he wouldn't do that!" Daphne exclaimed.

Kate remarked, "Some doctors do. My Aunt Emily once...."

"We don't keep in close touch with the lab crowd," interrupted Tommy. "Dr. Lindquist is head man there."

"I've seen Dr. Fenwick," Kate went on. "I thought he was quite attractive—in a brooding way. He roomed at Mrs. Doody's, and we used to go there for library board meetings."

"Mrs. Doody's?" queried Daphne as she picked up the funny paper and appeared to be absorbed in it.

Kate then said, "Tommy go take a nap. I feel like a walk. How about you, Daph?"

"I'd love a nice walk."

She wondered if Kate was onto her, and asked, "Would you like to go down by the mill, or up the hill toward Miller's place?"

"Mrs. Doody's house is not in either direction," snapped Kate. "It is two blocks in this direction—as you well know—and we can make it in seven minutes flat without hurrying."

Kate was "onto her," Daphne knew.

The War Today

By DeWitt MacKenzie

tage of this position. The First American army has been slashing at the German flank from the north, while Gen. Patton has been ripping in his usual spectacular fashion into the southern flank. Already these attacks have materially shortened Van Rundstedt's base and thereby increased his peril.

Two-gun Patton again is in the limelight in a heroic role. The spectacular manner in which he drove a corridor through enemy territory to carry relief to an American force surrounded in Bastogne is one of the epics of the war. But he's playing a much bigger part than that.

Patton's slashing thrust with his steel cavalry into the German southern flank probably is the greatest single threat hanging over Rundstedt at the moment. The way the Yankee general is tearing into the bulge, the German will have to look sharp to avoid having the opening at the base of his salient closed against his retreat into the Rhineland.

The overall picture will be easier to read a few days hence. The battle is by no means fully joined as yet, but the great clash can't long be delayed.

Ohio Aid For Aged Rolls Hit New Low

(By Associated Press)

COLUMBUS, Dec. 29.—The elderly folk who have depended upon the state for food and shelter are continuing to stream back to work, and Ohio aid for aged rolls are at their lowest figure in five years.

Karl R. Babb, chief of the State Division of Aid for the Aged, said today the number of indigent aged, 65 or older, receiving pensions averaging $29.35 a month, declined by 8,272 persons during 1944.

The figure stands at 122,051 recipients, as compared with the peak of 139,567 in January, 1942. Payments to the aged this year will aggregate $42,953,284, a drop of $1,196,721 under 1943. This is the first decline in the total costs in the program's 10-year history.

Higher incomes and expanded employment of relatives of the indigent have contributed also to the decline in the state's aid for aged rolls.

The backlog of pending applications for aid, which swelled to approximately 20,000 in 1939, has been reduced to 2,843, Babb said.

Woman Fatally Beaten

LIMA, Dec. 29.—Coroner Harry Lewis said he would issue a verdict today in the death of Mrs. Blanche Luck, 32, who he reported died yesterday of a severe beating. She was the mother of nine children.

The coroner said the husband, Harvey, also 32, told him he found his wife on the bed with her head battered when he came upstairs after tending the furnace.

STAY ON JOB

had many times been forced to halt firing because no shells were available. He said the cessations meant halting the retreat of the Germans until more ammunition was there.

"I've seen Christmas trees—beautiful ones—around here and many turkey dinners being served in clean, comfortable homes since I've been back. But those boys over there, the ones we just left a few months ago, don't have any of that. They don't finish work in the evening and go home to soft beds. They don't take days off and they don't have pay days like you people do."

"Every day, every hour and every minute you people stay away from your work just means that much longer and that much larger the terrible cost in blood and lives of our friends, buddies and your husbands, brothers, sons and sweethearts. That's what absenteeism means to them."

Fired Shells Exhibited
Capt. Symphon told the workers that on many occasions he had only 50 rounds of ammunition when he could have used 500.

H. M. Heckathorn, production manager of the Mullins plants, introduced two captains, who, in turn, presented the others.

The group's itinerary includes appearances at Columbus, Ravenna, Warren, Cleveland, Sandusky, Toledo, La Porte, Ind., Fort Wayne, Ind., Muncie, Ind., Springfield, Cincinnati, Charleston, W. Va., Dunbar, W. Va., Weirton, W. Va., Denver, Colo. and Fontana, Calif.

To remind workers of their pledges to these nine soldiers and to their own soldiers, the Gen. Eisenhower gun crew presented the plant with a photograph of a crew in action on the European front and two shells fired at the front, both of which were manufactured at Mullins.

All are to be displayed in a prominent place in the plant as a reminder to employees of their solemn duty towards ending this war, Capt. Symphon said.

10-MILE GAIN

and Hompre, three and four miles south of Bastogne.

Heavy fighting was in progress in the woods north of Assenois, but three miles southwest of Bastogne.

Von Rundstedt's December offensive had been kicked into reverse by American forces which slammed into all three sides of his extended bulge, with Lt. Gen. Patton's Third army, sensationally changing its front and advancing 20 miles into the German flank in six days.

The situation was not an un-mixed success, however, for Patton's shift of front brought his own offensive along the Saar to a stop, and obliged the Americans to give up their hard-won bridgehead at Dillingen.

Throughout the northwestern area of the German penetration, from Celles to Rochefort, doughboys, tanks and greyhound armored cars slashed across the frozen fields, overrunning German trucks, armored cars and infantrymen wandering blindly. The Americans groped for their disorganized enemy in a fog which limited visibility to 50 yards.

The Lesse and Homme at Rochefort wind approximately 14 miles east of the Meuse and 10 miles southeast of Celles, deepest point of German penetration toward Dinant. Here the critical battle was fought in the hamlet of Humain, four miles southwest of Marche and four miles north of Rochefort.

Strafe U. S. Hospital

WITH THE SIXTH ARMY GROUP, Dec. 29.—A U. S. general hospital at Mirecourt, France, was bombed and strafed in moonlight Tuesday by two German planes. The buildings are clearly marked with red crosses. Soldier patients and military personnel were wounded.

explained the Nipponese repair their fields in half an hour and "every time our men fly over they find airfields repaired."

For the third successive day Yank forces heavily bombed Halmahera island from which the Japanese periodically try to ferry troops to the U. S. airbase island of Morotai, 300 miles south of the Philippines.

MacArthur announced 912 Japanese were killed and 16 taken prisoner by Yanks mopping up Leyte island. There's a lot of mopping up to be done in rugged territory, said Jim Hutcherson, Associated Press war correspondent with the 7th division.

Tokyo radio reported completion of an underwater tunnel linking the main island of Japan—Honshu and Kyushu—which may be used when fighting reaches the homeland.

Portable Diesel Power Plants Made At Warren

WARREN, Dec. 29.—"Sled-borne" Diesel power plants, source of emergency current for military and civilian needs in occupied countries, are being completed at the Warren City Manufacturing Co., the Graham-Paige Motors Co., parent concern, announced today.

The Warren firm produces welded steel platforms on which generating units of 246 to 640 horsepower are mounted. Transported on trailers of the tank-recovery type, complete units weighing up to 33½ tons can be quickly hauled into position by tractors.

Graham-Paige disclosed its subsidiary also is converting the generating sets, originally intended for shipboard use to conform with most continental power systems.

The mobile plants enable U. S. Army engineers to cut in on existing power lines to produce current for water supply, sewage disposal and limited illumination until regular facilities are restored, the statement said.

M'AULIFFE

jumped out of a C-47; here I jumped out of the rear of a truck," said a dismounted parachute trooper who started fighting less than an hour after arriving in Bastogne and kept on until he was carried off, wounded.

Praises Patatroopers

Maj. Charles E. Fife of Los Angeles, member of an armored force headquarters staff, said: "These parachute troopers were the best morale buckers-uppers we had."

"Those boys fought like hell from the word go," he said. "They know their stuff and they proceeded to show it."

Three days after Field Marshal Karl Von Rundstedt launched his offensive Dec. 16 along the Belgian-Luxembourg frontier, the U. S. Third army commander was handed the job of stemming the enemy drive.

In record time his men and armor were rolling in a swelling tide toward the critical front.

One of his objectives was to relieve the besieged garrison here in this strategic road hub. He did.

Town Is Shambles
Bastogne is a shambles, but it is firmly in American hands.

His men and armor advanced up to 16 miles in six days along an east-to-west front extending from the Luxembourg-German border to west of Bastogne.

They lifted a threat to the city of Luxembourg by pounding the Germans back two to 14 miles after they had speared within 13 miles of the duchy's capital.

They reached Bastogne through a corridor that narrowed to only one mile as it entered the town, but widened at its base to three miles.

In Bastogne, bulldozers had to clear the streets. Litter squads lifted dead from the ruins.

Today there were some 200 destroyed German tanks lying in and about the town, hundreds of dead and more hundreds of German prisoners in cages.

Von Rundstedt has lost the first round of what may well be the war's decisive battle. He lost it to American fighting men who did not know what it was to surrender, men who fought on rationed ammunition and scant food until Patton's army broke the ring about Bastogne with spectacular aid from our air forces.

LEAVES FROM A WAR CORRESPONDENT'S NOTEBOOK

by Hal Boyle

WITH AMERICAN TROOPS IN BELGIUM—Never before had the two combat engineers fired a bazooka—but then never before had Nazi tanks overrun their positions. So T 5 Claofas Hernandez, San Antonio, Texas, and T 5 Jack Hoge, Dunlap, Tenn., knelt behind a fallen tree at the roadside, and waited for a target. They had three projectiles. Hoge

lowed from the tank, which blew up. "We tried again at another tank with our third shell," Hoge said sadly, "but it was wide of the mark."

T 5 Arnold A. Betcher, Red Wing, Minn., was so surprised when the first German tank rolled past him with the commander half-exposed in the turret that he didn't fire a shot.

When the second tank of the Nazi column came along, Betcher sighted his carbine just above the turret and pulled the trigger. Blood spurted from the commander's head as he fell back into the tank. Betcher escaped before other tanks could spot him.

It isn't often anyone can claim they escaped alive after an enemy tank fired at them from a one-foot range. But one American officer and three enlisted men did it. They were in a jeep carrying 300 pounds of TNT to the front to blow up a bridge and halt the German advance. Driving was T 5 Brady O. Berryhiff, Palestine, Tex. His passengers were Sgt. Joe A. Broadstreet, San Angelo, and Pfc. Adolph E. Johle, Schwartz, Tex., and Lt. Charles F. Lawver, Baltimore, Md. A tank roared out of a side road and Berryhiff halted the jeep one foot short of the tank. Its gun roared with a blast that bounced Johle clear out of the jeep. Berryhiff swung the jeep around and shot down the road, pulling off at the first path and hiding behind a barn. Johle scrambled into a doorway and got away, too.

When the enemy threatened to overrun one divisional command post, the commanding general fought all about his dignity. "We are going to hold this post," he said grimly. He personally rallied his cooks, orderlies, drivers and clerks, and threw them into a hurried defense line. He directed traffic and supervised, while under heavy artillery and tank fire, the placing of strategic anti-tank defenses. German Tiger tanks drove to within 200 yards of the post but the "mess shack" army knocked out so many Nazi vehicles the enemy had to retreat.

The present consumption of aviation gasoline by our air forces is over 150,000,000 gallons a month in the theaters of operations only.

Deming, China And Zion Class B Quintet Post Victories

SCORES SINK IN SECOND FRAYS

China Cut Down To 18 Points As They Nose Out Cavaliers

Taming down considerably from the high-scoring opening evening, Class B play at the Memorial building last night saw three teams, Demings, Salem China and Zion, post wins over the Men About Town, Cavaliers and Washingtonville, respectively.

The thriller of the evening was the China-Cavaliers battle, which went to the Pottery, 18-17, after a nip-and-tuck duel all the way. By far the most potent scoring machine in round openers, the China dropped from 58 points in the first game to just 18 last night. Jerry Mosher led the Pottery to victory with six points. John Pozniko was leader for the losers with six markers.

Demings had slight trouble in handing the Men About Town their second straight defeat, 33-25. Kozar of the Deming crew copped the high of the evening, tying with Bob Bigge of Zion with 12 points. Kenst was next high with 10 points.

Unfortunate Washingtonville, losers of two straight, felt hard last night, 35-19, as the Zion outfit came through with the first win of the season. Bigge, with his 12 points, and Bob Boone, with 10 more, made things tough for the losers. Tetlow picked up nine points for Washingtonville.
